which he never had tired of playing on his talking machine at home, was sung oby a double quartet. The singing had been included in the service at the suggestion of Secretary Daniels. "Lead, Kindly Light," which had been President McKinley's favorite among hymns, and "Ablde with Me" completed the musical programme.

The midshipmen led again when the cortege resumed its march toward Arlington. Their enlisted band, marching ahead, played a dirge until it had passed out of the Capitol grounds, then struck up a lively quickstep. The sailor band and Marine Band further back in the cortege, made the same change in cadence as they turned into Pennsylvania Avenue, for the service which forbid. In a year or two, perhas come to realize that slow music cannot bring back the dead.

They've aimed a law at Tony, which, if somebody doesn't stop it, will drive the poor fellow and his ancient music machine into the gutter forever. It has been introduced in the State Legisland Association of Albany.

Caisson Follows Military

In the wake of the military, with their crape-hung standards, came the caisson and the flag-draped coffin. The Held in St. Paul's Chapel of Aqueduct Bridge had been accom-plished the marchers were permitted to fall into route step, for they had then been on parade for more than three hours. Besides, on the long, uphill road leading to the Fort Myer reserva-tion, there were few onlookers.

cemetery the procession wended, to the accompaniment of Chopin and the guns.

Passed Graves of Heroes

The caisson, moving toward the resting place of its burden, passed first a region in which little white slabs grewout of the ground in mathematical precision. Beneath them was the fighting stock of the Civil War. It passed the simple menument which marks simple monument which marks the grave of Thomas Ellwood Rose, who, by its legend, "engineered and executed the Libby Prison tunnel," only to be recaptured while following his companions back into the protection of the Union lines; it passed the grave of Midshipman "Jimmy" Cruse, who, grievously wounded when a turret gan aboard the battleship Georgia backfired in 1907, said: "Never mind metals and the companion of the land of the my men!"

I'm all right. Look after my men!

These are random samples of the kind of men who lie in Arlington
Dewey's own kind.

It was an uphill road all the way that the cortege followed, and it was at the crest of the highest hill that it stopped. There General Nelson A. Miles has built himself a mausoleum, in which it had been arranged Admiral Dewey's body should lie until a final resting place was decided on.

Approaching it, the caisson again.

Approaching it, the caisson again passed through a lane of blue-clad "middies" standing at present. "middies" standing at present.
Around the mausoleum were countless stands and wreaths of flowers, sent
